Purpose

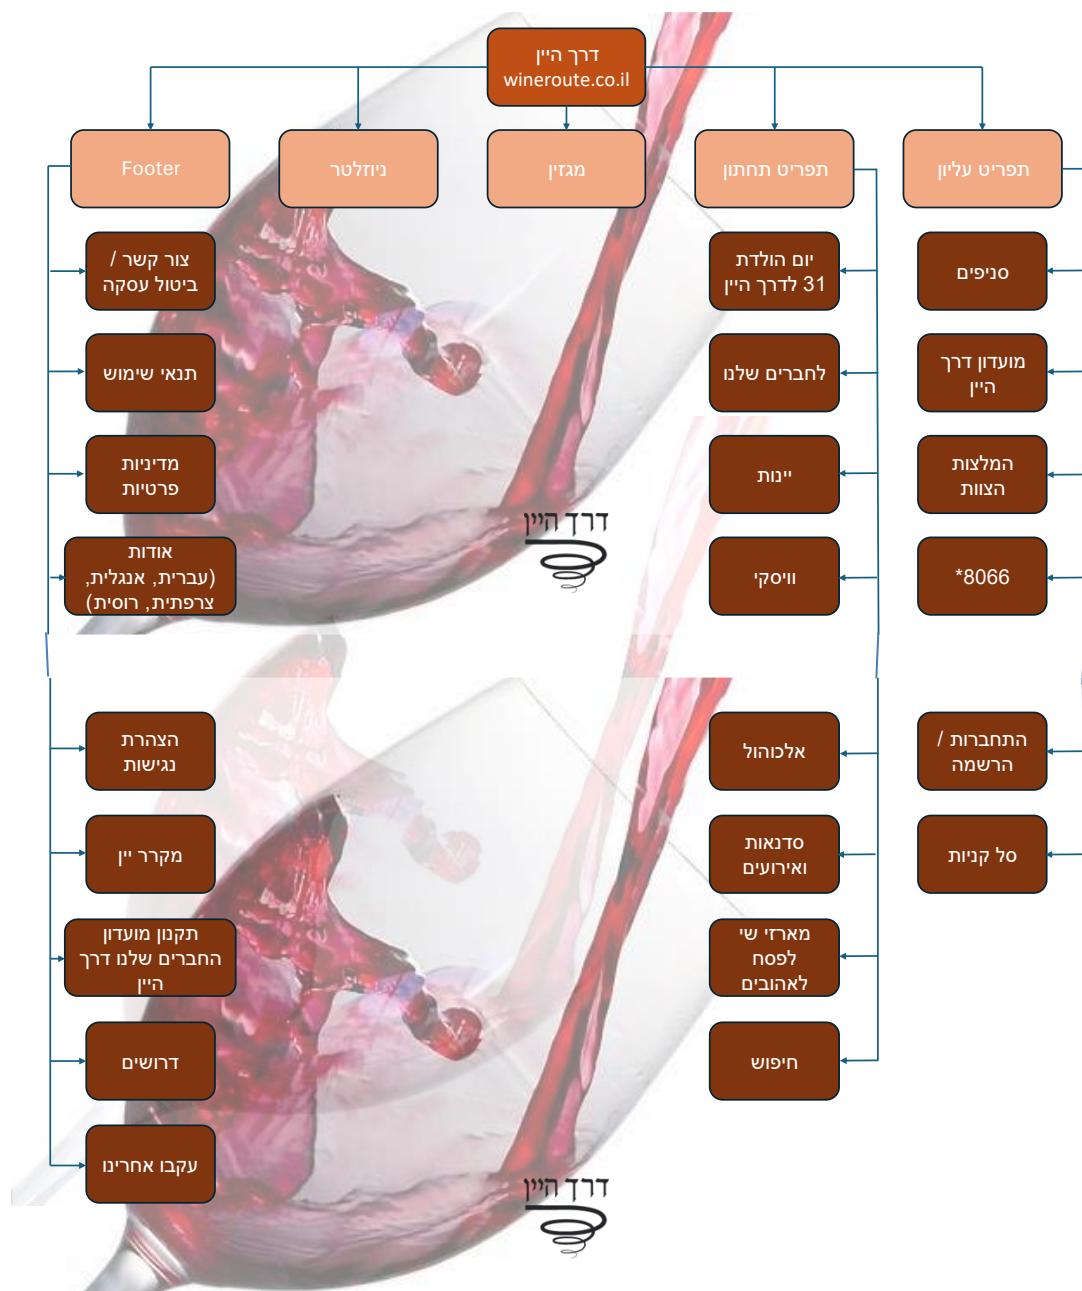

This document highlights the findings from tests conducted on the "Wine Route" website, specifically identifying bugs within key functions such as signing in/up, site navigation, menu exploration, utilizing various features, locating branch information, and the process of ordering products.

Application Overview

The "Wine Route" website revolves around its dual role as a web and mobile platform.

It is designed to exhibit the chain's menu offerings and facilitates users in placing orders for either delivery or self-pickup directly from the displayed menu options.

Testing Index

Metrix

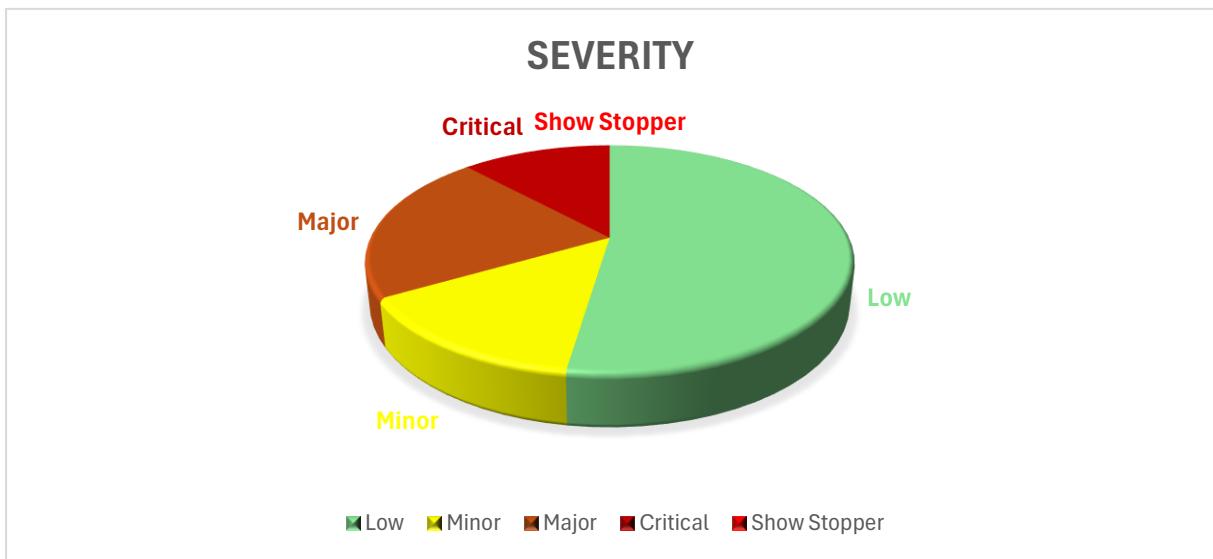

Severity Bugs – Status

The severity bugs-status table provides a breakdown of identified bugs based on their severity levels.

It indicates no ShowStopper issues, 5 Critical bugs, 9 Major bugs, 6 Minor bugs, and 22 Low severity bugs, totaling 42 bugs across all categories.

This overview aids in prioritizing and addressing software quality concerns efficiently.

ShowStopper	Critical	Major	Minor	Low	Total
0	5	9	6	22	42

Recommendation

1. Fixing the site by making it support different resolutions.
2. Add an 'out of stock' tag below the out of stock products.
3. Block options to fill in incorrect details in the fields (for example: letters and special characters in the phone number field).
4. Upgrade the filter option so that the customer can filter several categories together.
5. Fixing a feature of calling the business so that customers can call.
6. UI fixes (for example: Menu design).

Conclusion

Following the various test carried out on the "Wine Route" website several bugs were found.

Most of them have a severity level between low and major and most of them are defined as UI/UX bugs.

Although these issues aren't highly severe, I believe they might pose challenges for users when performing simple tasks, such as ordering wine. Nevertheless, the website still functions well, achieving its main objectives—allowing users to effortlessly view the menu and place orders for home delivery or self-collection.

As a result, I recommend releasing the site!
